Rough description – The Paekakariki Escarpment – A ten kilometre walk high above SH1 and the North Island Main Trunk rail line on the Kapiti Coast just south of Paraparaumu from Paekakariki to Pukerua Bay. Not suitable for youngsters, the nervous aged, those who suffer from vertigo or dislike steps. Great plant life and tremendous views whilst the return can be sheer bliss by catching the train back from Pukerua Bay to Paekakariki – remember your Gold Card!

Detail: From the station parking area (WP01) walk south parallel to the rail line and turn right plus cross the road that crosses the level crossing. Pass a few white concrete seats then left at the junction (WP02). Continue down this street to the SW until it meets SH1 (WP03) to turn sharply back on itself and head NE up SH1. Head down the steep steps (WP04) to get under and away from the chaos of SH1 and on to a well formed track bordered by many native plants and wild flowers. From here it is hard to go wrong as there is nowhere else to go but on the track. Within the hour the first set of steps is met (WP05) then there is the first fitness test presented as a very steep zig zag upwards (WP06).

If the energy can be found and nerves overcome forget the effort and look down and out towards the sea – the views can be most rewarding – also look out for the cast iron kilometric posts as a gauge of progress.

At the high point (WP07), which is also basically the halfway point, there is a seat where a rest can be had whilst some rehydration and refuelling is also done.

Some people do not like ascending large flights of steps whilst other hate going down them – the descents ahead can be daunting. It really is very steep but the views of the shoreline, the non-stop traffic on the highway plus the regular trains make it all rather exciting and help to relieve any possible feelings of insecurity or vertigo!

There are two very new, very stable swing bridges to cross – both bridges (WP08 and WP09) are pretty high but can carry 5 persons at a time so very safe and do give tremendous views though after crossing each bridge there is an inevitable steep re-ascent.

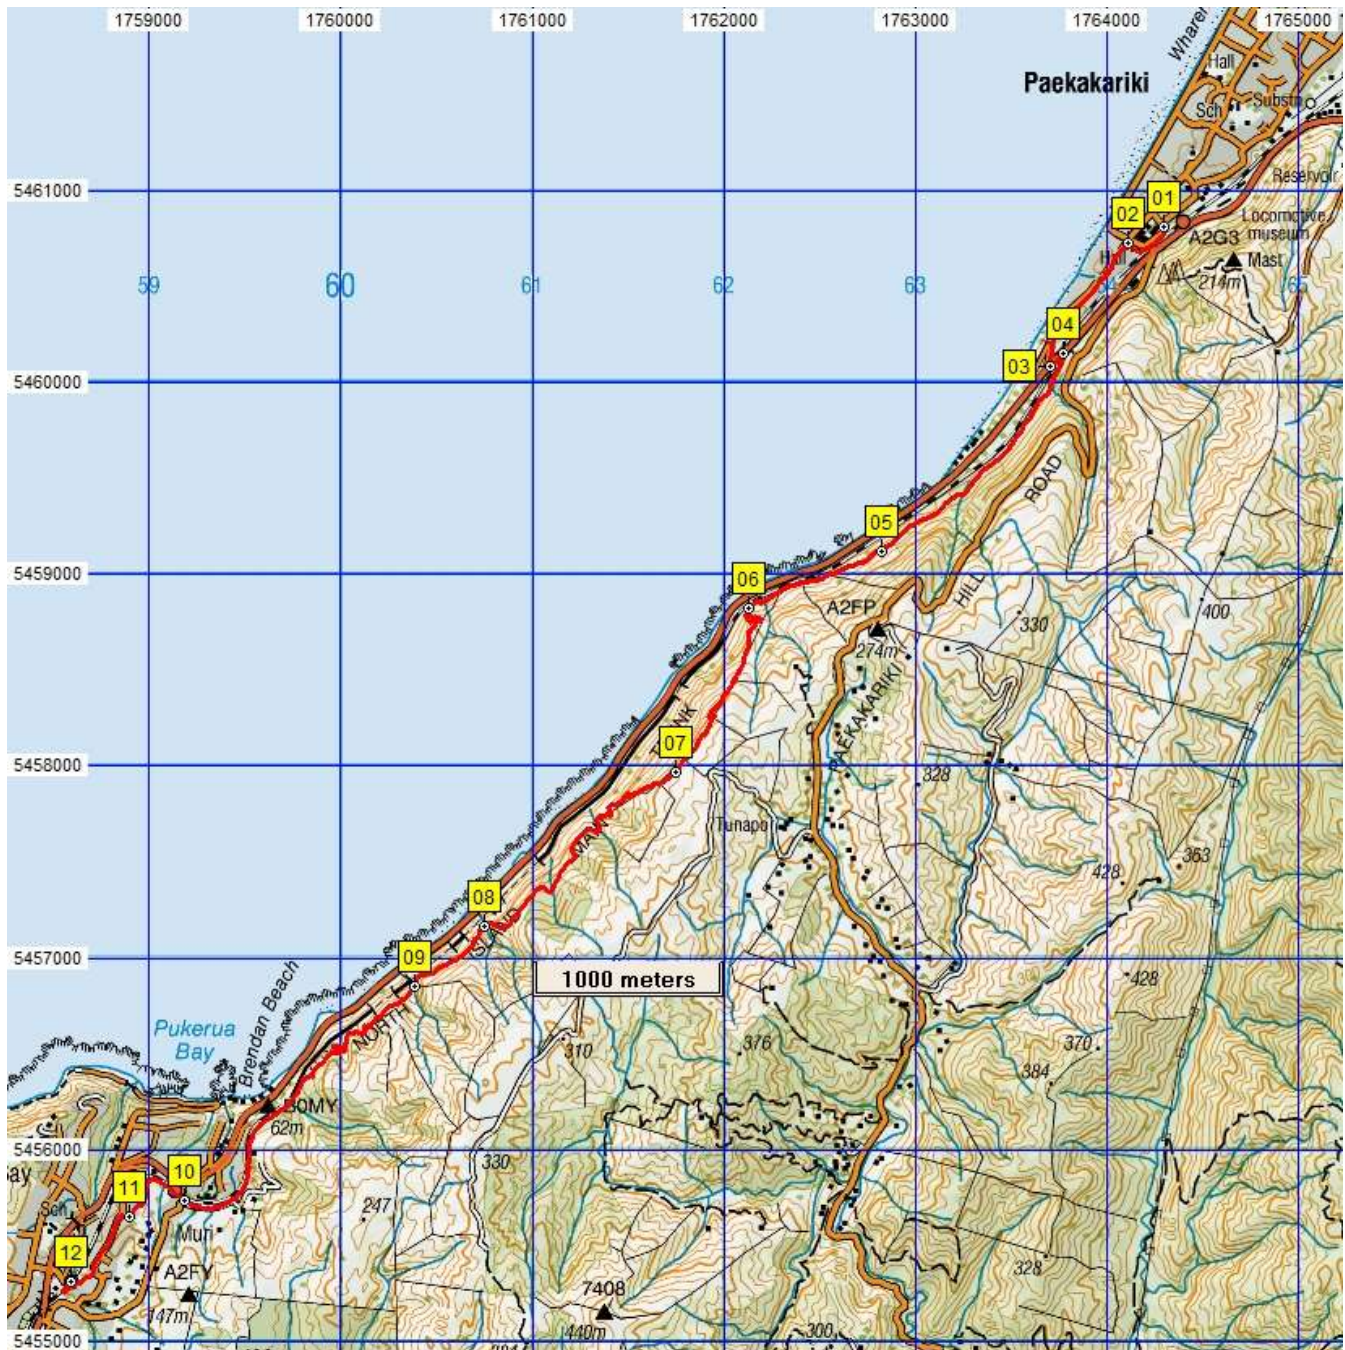

The next section is less visually pleasing as it looks like the buildings etc of Pukerua Bay seem to stay as far away as ever whilst the track is close to the rail line but the station does not show itself. There is large sign advising that whistling is necessary – perhaps this is for trains and not trampers.

Eventually a gate is passed through (WP10) giving access to an old railway platform and “station closed” sign.

After the “closed station” the track heads up a grassy slope, which most legs seem to object to, and after about three and a half hours the walking is on the streets of suburban Pukerua Bay (WP11) before a walkway with the picture of a “puffing” train goes to the right, past a large skate park and children’s playground leading to the Pukerua Bay rail station (WP12). Trains are scheduled about every thirty minutes and offer a very comfortable – free if a Gold Card is held – ride back to the starting point in Paekakariki Station. The whole walk is signposted to take 4 hours and this time can easily be met by most people.

Kapiti Island

This is one of the “not to be missed” opportunities that DOC manages and all that is done here is to show on the map where one can walk with an indication of times involved – the standard trip organised by the boat charter companies allows ample time for a good look around and browse.

The route recommended is to go up (WP03) the trig track – too steep, root infested and slippery for safe descent – passing some feeders (WP04) en-route to reach the Junction (WP05) before heading to the tower (WP07) on the summit. The return route is on the wide though rather muddy and slippery when wet Wilkinson Track

There really are birds everywhere and on the day the following were seen Kereru (fat as chickens), Weka (everywhere), Stitchbirds, Saddlebacks, Tomtits, Fantail, Robin, Tui and, of course, the entertaining Kaka. Many others were heard but not seen

This is a weather dependent trip as it involves the boat trip which takes about 20min each way.
